PETITION FOR WRIT OF MANDATE

San Diego County Superior Court Case No. MCR 16-061
Hon. Jay M. Bloom

TO THE HONORABLE JUDITH McCONNELL, PRESIDING JUSTICE, AND TO THE HONORABLE ASSOCIATE JUSTICES OF THE COURT OF APPEAL OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA, FOURTH APPELLATE DISTRICT, DIVISION ONE:

INTRODUCTION

This petition seeks the return of $100,693 belonging to the four members of the Slatic family—James, his wife Annette, and her two young daughters, Lily and Penny. No family member has been charged with any crime. The Slatics' money was seized for civil forfeiture following a police raid on James's legal medical marijuana business. More than 10 months later, however, no one from the business has been charged with a crime and no civil forfeiture case has been filed against the family's money.

After the Slatics moved for the return of their property, an evidentiary hearing demonstrated there is no link between their money and the one crime that James's business allegedly committed—the extraction of a controlled substance. However, the court below declined to return the family's money based on two errors of law.

First, the court failed to apply recent amendments to the state's medical marijuana laws that allow extraction. These amendments went into effect a month before the raid and they allow precisely the conduct that the court deemed illegal.

Second, the court improperly allocated the burden of proof. The People—not the Slatics—bore the burden of tracing the family's money to a crime. Yet, the police made no effort to trace the family's money to extraction. On the other hand, the Slatics offered unrebutted testimony and documentary evidence showing that they had non-medical-marijuana sources for their money. The court discounted all of this evidence because it believed that the Slatics were required to offer third-party testimony negating traceability. But on-point law holds that traceability is the People's obligation.

This Court should now grant the petition. The two legal errors below have allowed the People to seize the Slatics' money for more than 10 months in defiance of clear statutory and constitutional commands. This Court should therefore issue a writ of mandate ordering the immediate return of the Slatics' money.

PETITION FOR WRIT OF MANDATE

Petitioners James Slatic, Annette Slatic, Lily Cohen, and Penny Cohen, by their attorneys Victor Manuel Torres, Wesley Hottot, and Allison Daniel, hereby petition this Court for a writ of mandate directed to the Superior Court of the State of California for the County of San Diego. By this verified petition, Petitioners declare that:

I.

Petitioners are the owners of $100,693 seized from their respective bank accounts based on seizure orders issued by the Respondent Court.

II.

Respondent is the Superior Court of the State of California for the County of San Diego.

III.

Real Party in Interest is the People of the State of California.

IV.

The Respondent Court issued two sets of orders pertaining to Petitioners' money. In February 2016, the Honorable Frederick Maguire issued Search Warrants 51082 and 51083, which ordered Petitioners' banks to freeze their accounts and turn over bank records. In June 2016, the Honorable Jay M. Bloom issued Seizure Orders 52005 and 52007, which ordered the banks to transfer all of Petitioners' money to the San Diego District Attorney.

V.

The San Diego District Attorney obtained both sets of orders based on the testimony of Detective Mark Carlson. Carlson is assigned to the Asset Removal Group of a regional drug task force composed of San Diego police and agents of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency. In a series of affidavits, he alleged probable cause to believe all money in the Slatics' bank accounts represents the "proceeds from drug transactions per Health and Safety Code 11470." Carlson alleged that James Slatik committed one crime: manufacturing a controlled substance using a prohibited chemical extraction process, in violation of Health and Safety Code § 11379.6. No other crime has been alleged against James or his business. The People have never alleged that Annette, Lily, or Penny committed a crime.

VI.

In the 10 months since Petitioners' money was seized, neither James nor anyone associated with his business has been charged with any crime.

VII.

Petitioners made a motion for return of property in May 2016, in which they challenged the Respondent Court's freezing orders on the ground that they needed their money in order to fund a potential criminal defense. Judge Maguire denied this motion without prejudice, except with respect to three items the People agreed to return—$59 in Penny's checking account, $203 in Lily's checking account, and a few coins in a safe deposit box belonging to James's mother. The end result was that Judge Maguire's freezing orders remained in place as to all money in James and Annette's accounts and all money in Lily and Penny's savings accounts.

VIII.

Shortly after this motion for return of property was denied, the People requested formal seizure of Petitioners' money. Again based on Detective Carlson's testimony, Judge Bloom granted Seizure Orders 52005 and 52007, which authorized the district attorney to take possession of all remaining money in the family's bank accounts. See Ex. B, Motion for Return of Property, Exs. at 1–2.

IX.

The seizure orders resulted in the transfer from Petitioners' bank accounts to the district attorney of $55,258.60 belonging to James, $34,175.14 belonging to Annette, $5,616.38 belonging to 20 year-old Lily Cohen, and $5,643.73 belonging to 17 year-old Penny Cohen. No civil forfeiture action has been filed against this money.

X.

In late October, 2016, Petitioners filed a second motion for return of property. See Ex. B. This motion challenged the finding of probable cause on which Seizure Orders 52005 and 52007 relied, based on Penal Code §§ 1538.5(a)(1)(B)(iii), 1539(a)(iii), 1540 and Health and Safety Code § 11488.4 (g)–(h). The Penal Code requires such a motion to go before the same judicial officer who signed the seizure orders—in this case Judge Bloom. See Pen. Code § 1538.5(b). Judge Bloom heard live testimony on the motion on November 14–15, 2016 and, on November 16, denied the motion in a written opinion. See Ex. A. This petition seeks to overturn that decision.

XI.

Petitioners pray this Court orders a peremptory writ of mandate directed to the Respondent Court, requiring that it grant Petitioners' motion for return of property and ordering the return of all $100,693 seized from them.

XII.

Alternatively, if this Court does not order a peremptory writ as to all $100,693, it should order the Respondent Court to return that portion of the seized funds which this Court deems unconnected to any criminal activity.

XIII.

Petitioners have no other plain, speedy and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law and will suffer irreparable injury if the requested relief is not granted.

XIV.

The attached Memorandum of Points and Authorities and its exhibits are incorporated into this petition by this reference.

Dated: December 16, 2016

Respectfully submitted,

Victor Manuel Torres
Attorney for Petitioners

VERIFICATION

I, VICTOR MANUEL TORRES, declare:

I have been retained as local counsel for Petitioners James Slatic, Annette Slatic, Lily Cohen, and Penny Cohen in this case. I am an attorney licensed to practice in the courts of the State of California. I have read and know the contents of the foregoing petition for writ of mandate and declare that its contents are true based on my personal knowledge, except matters alleged on the basis of information and belief, and as to those matters, I believe them to be true.

I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct.

Executed this 16th day of December, 2016, in San Diego, California.

Victor Manuel Torres
Attorney for Petitioners

MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES

This memorandum demonstrates that the Respondent Court made two legal errors which caused it to deny the Slatics' motion for return of property. After hearing testimony, the court held that there is probable cause to believe that James Slatc's medical marijuana business was using an illegal process of extraction. Ex. A at 2:14–26. And it held that there is probable cause to believe that every penny in the Slatc family's bank accounts is connected to that crime. Id. at 3:5–7. As shown below, those rulings were incorrect as a matter of law because, on the day of the raid, medical marijuana businesses were legally allowed to extract in precisely the manner alleged and because the People—not the Slatics—bore the burden of tracing the family's money to an actual crime, and yet, the People made no effort to do so in this case. Accordingly, this Court should issue a writ of mandate overturning the decision below and ordering the return of the Slatics' money.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

- I. The four members of the Slatc family—James, his wife Annette, and her daughters Lily and Penny—had $100,693 seized from their personal bank accounts the day after police raided James Slatc's legal medical marijuana business in January 2016.

For two years, James Slatc operated a legal medical marijuana business from a 14,000-square-foot commercial building on San Diego's Engineer Road, located next to a Korean church and across from a Mercedes-Benz dealership. See Reporter’s Transcript, Vol. I, Nov. 14, 2016 (“Tr. Vol. 1”) at 154:12–18; 156:2–4; 190:10–14. His business consisted of two limited liability companies—Med-West Distribution and Highland Medical Packaging—which belonged to a non-profit medical marijuana collective, Pacific Heights Partners. See id. at 152:19–24; 153:12–154:18; 171:18–20.

Med-West purchased extracted cannabis oil from other members of the collective and refined the oil for use in vaporizer pens and topical oils. Id. at 153:12–16; 169:25–5.¹ Highland Medical provided packaging and administrative support for this operation. Id. at 153:17–23; 171:22–172:12. Med-West never sold directly to the public; its products were sold to Pacific Heights Partners and other collectives, which made them available to medical marijuana patients through licensed dispensaries. Id. at 161:11–162:24.

Med-West was able to operate openly in this way because it complied with California’s medical marijuana laws and paid hundreds of thousands of dollars in taxes. See id. at 156:5–157:14; 182:1–19. The business had 35 employees, medical benefits, and a 401(k) plan. Id. at 154:27–155:5. It had a website publicly describing its manufacturing methods and products. Id. at 24:9–15; 160:22–161:1. San Diego officials knew the business was there—they had conducted a walkthrough of its Engineer Road facility. Id. at 182:16–19. At the time, San Diego had no local regulations for marijuana manufacturing, and James repeatedly sought the city’s guidance about how to remain compliant. Id. at 182:6–19.

The first indication of trouble came on January 28, 2016, when a local drug task force raided Med-West while carrying out a search warrant. Id. at 145:25–26; see also Ex. J at 3:24–26. Officers seized computers, records, equipment, and $324,979 in business proceeds. Tr. Vol. 1 at 22:16–19; 146:25–147:3. Two employees were briefly arrested and released. See id. at 146:4–7. With all of its assets in custody, Med-West stopped operating. See id. at 145:19–26

For James and his family, however, the real nightmare began the next day, when police used civil forfeiture to freeze every penny in their personal bank accounts. See id. at 148:9–23. Without warning, James lost access to $55,258 in his personal checking account; his wife, Annette, lost $34,175; and her daughters, 17 year-old Penny and 20 year-old Lily, lost a combined $11,260, which Annette had set aside for their college expenses. See Verified Petition for Writ of Mandate at IX, p. 13 above; Tr. Vol. 1 at 199:23–27, 205:21–23, 213:6–22. The family was left with virtually nothing on which to live.

II. The police made no effort to connect the family’s money to the only crime alleged—the extraction of cannabis oil.

The Slatics’ money was seized based on one detective’s suspicion that James, by operating Med-West, committed one crime—the illegal extraction of cannabis oil. No other allegations have been made against James or his business. No allegations of any kind have been made against Annette, Lily, or Penny. And, critically, the detective made no effort to trace the family’s money to Med-West’s alleged crime of extraction.

The seizure orders in this case relied exclusively on the testimony of Mark Carlson—a San Diego Police detective assigned to the “Asset Removal Group” of the drug task force that raided Med-West. See Exs. I & J; Tr. Vol. 1 at 13:3–14:5; see also Ex. B, Mot. for Return of Property at Exs. 1 & 2. Carlson’s affidavits specifically allege that the Slatics’ money is subject to civil forfeiture because it is connected to a crime. See Ex. I at 12:22–23 & 13:8–10 (relying on Health & Safety Code § 11470 to request forfeiture of all funds in bank accounts belonging to Annette, Penny, and Lily); Ex. J at 12:19–20 & 13:5–7 (same with respect to James). He also alleges one specific crime, representing that “[c]harges of Manufacturing of a Controlled Substance (Concentrated Cannabis Extraction) per 11379.6 [Health and Safety Code] are pending filing by the San Diego District Attorney against James SLATIC.” Ex. J at 12:19–20. But Carlson never explained how the actual money he seized from the Slatics can be traced to the alleged crime of extraction. See Ex. I & J.

Instead, Carlson’s affidavits rely on just three concrete allegations about James’s account. First, he details five instances in which James transferred money to his wife’s account beginning in May 2014. Ex. J at 10:12–15. Second, he points to five checks that James received from Highland Medical Packaging. Id. at 10:17–25. Finally, he alleges that 21 cash deposits, which James made over the course of two and a half years, must have come from Med-West because police found a large amount of cash at Med-West. Id. at 11:1–17. On this basis alone, Carlson concluded that every dollar in James’s account is “tied to his concentrated cannabis extraction business.” Id. at 12:3–4. But he made no effort to show how the specific money in the account was “proceeds traceable to” illegal extraction, as required by Health and Safety Code § 11470(f). See pp. 29–36 below.

Carlson did even less investigation for Annette’s account. He merely noted that Annette sometimes received money from James, see Ex. I at 10:3–7, and concluded on that basis that James had “transferred significant funds from his concentrated cannabis extraction business . . . to his wife,” id. at 12:14–16. Similarly, for Lily and Penny’s accounts, Carlson simply noted that Annette sometimes transferred money to her daughters from her account. Id. at 12:19–21. He made no effort to show that the money in the accounts was “proceeds traceable to” illegal extraction.

III. Unrebutted evidence showed that the family’s money came from legitimate sources, regardless of whether a crime was committed.

At the hearing on their motion, the Slatics demonstrated legitimate sources for all $100,693 seized from their bank accounts.² The sources of those funds were shown to be wholly unconnected to Med-West and its alleged crime of extraction.

As Detective Carlson acknowledged, James deposited a $149,375 check shortly before the seizure “from his ownership in High Quality Organics.” Ex. J at 12:4–6; Ex. P. At the time of the seizure orders, Carlson testified:

I do not know the true nature of the business, High Quality Organics, or where SLATIC obtained his finances for his investment into High Quality Organics. Even if the returns of $149,375.00 were generated by legitimate non-drug investments, these returns have been comingled into account 169426, which contains proceeds from SLATIC’s HIGHLAND MEDICAL PACKAGING LLC.

Ex. J at 12:13–18.

² Petitioners did not seek the return of the $324,979 seized from Med-West. Civil forfeiture proceedings have been initiated against the business’s money. See People v. $324,979.00 in U.S. Currency, Civil No. 37-2016-00006961-CU-AF-CTL in the San Diego County Superior Court. Petitioners only sought the return of the Slatic family’s personal money below, against which the People have not filed a civil forfeiture case.

Unrebutted evidence at the hearing cleared up any confusion about the “true nature of the business.” A representative of High Quality Organics testified that it is a culinary spice business with no connection to marijuana. Tr. Vol. 1 at 125:19–126:6. The company’s website makes clear that it sells only culinary spices, see Ex. L, and its legitimate nature could have easily been confirmed by Detective Carlson at the time of the seizure. In any case, testimony and documentary evidence at the hearing showed that High Quality Organics has no connection to drugs. This evidence went unrebutted.

Unrebutted testimony also showed that James had a legitimate reason for receiving money from High Quality Organics: He once owned a stake in the company. Both James and the company’s chairman testified that James was being paid, in annual installments, as part of a buy-out agreement. Tr. Vol. 1 at 129:27–130:17; 150:27–151:2. The company’s December 2015 check of $149,375 was admitted into evidence, showing that James deposited this money on January 5, 2016—23 days before the raid. See Ex. P at 2; see also Tr. Vol. 1 at 149:21–150:7. James testified that some of this money was in his account when it was seized. Tr. Vol. 1 at 151:3–6. And documentary evidence confirmed this was true. See Ex. Q (January 2016 statement for James’s account).

Annette Slatic also had legitimate sources for the money in her account. She makes more than $45,000 a year as a part-time x-ray technician at the Veterans Affairs (VA) hospital in La Jolla, and her government paychecks are direct deposited into the account that was seized. Tr. Vol. 1 at 194:18–195:15. She also receives between $1,400 and $2,000 a month in child support payments from her ex-husband, Mark Cohen, the biological father of Lily and Penny. Id. at 195:16–28.

Annette’s testimony was corroborated by Detective Carlson. At the time of the seizure, Carlson knew about these obviously legitimate sources for the money in Annette’s accounts. He knew that Annette was a VA employee, id. at 70:24–71:15, and he knew that her ex-husband was making deposits into her account, id. at 73:18–75:2. However, Carlson excluded this information from his affidavits in support of the seizure orders. He excluded information about Annette’s VA job because he did not believe it was pertinent to include sources of income from legitimate employment. Id. at 73:9–16. He excluded information about Mark Cohen’s payment of child support because he did not think it was his job to show “all the deposits that came from everyone.” Id. at 74:19–75:20. Instead, he “went to the specifics that [he] needed to include” while “[c]learly, there are other factors involved with [the] accounts as far as other deposits.” Id. at 75:16–23. In other words, Carlson omitted information showing legitimate sources for the funds in Annette’s accounts from his seizure affidavits, but admitted on the stand that there were legitimate sources.

Additionally, both James and Annette testified that a substantial amount of money—approximately $200,000—was transferred from James’s account to Annette’s account to cover the cost of renovations that began after the purchase of their home in May 2014. Id. at 168:7–24, 196:16–197:18. This testimony is corroborated by Detective Carlson’s seizure affidavits, which note that James transferred $210,200 into Annette’s accounts. Ex. I at 12:14–21. It is further corroborated by Carlson’s testimony that James began making transfers to Annette in May 2014. Ex. J at 10:12–15 (noting $176,000 in checks written to Annette from James’s account). This testimony explains why James “transferred significant funds” to Annette as alleged in Carlson’s affidavits.

The testimony at the hearing also showed that Lily and Penny had legitimate sources for the money in their savings accounts. Annette had set up these accounts on her daughters’ behalf when she started work at the VA. Id. at 199:12–27. She would occasionally deposit money from her VA paycheck into these accounts in the hope of helping the girls with college expenses. Id. at 199:24–200:4. None of this money came from James or his business, as Annette, Lily, and Penny all testified. Id. at 200:5–9, 206:8–18, 208:4–6, 213:27–214:21. There has never been any allegation (let alone any evidence) that Annette, Lily, or Penny had any involvement in James’s business. All three testified at the hearing that they had zero involvement. Id. at 198:17–28; 208:7–8, 214:20–21; see also id.

at 154:19–26 (James confirming they had no role, whether formal or informal with the business). This testimony went unchallenged by the People.

There is, in summary, nothing connecting the legitimate sources of the Slatics' funds to James's alleged crime of extraction. The People ignored legitimate sources that were known to them at the time of the seizure and, at the hearing, the Slatics dispelled any remaining doubts through their own testimony, Detective Carlson's testimony, the testimony of a third party, and documentary evidence.

ARGUMENT

I. The Respondent Court twice erred as a matter of law when it denied the Slatic family's motion for return of property.

When, as here, property is seized for civil forfeiture under Health and Safety Code § 11470, a court must find probable cause to believe that a drug crime occurred and probable cause to believe the specific property is connected to that drug crime. See, e.g., People v. $47,050 (1993) 17 Cal.App.4th 1319, 1322–23 (noting “the People must make a minimum prima facie showing of probable cause to believe the property is subject to forfeiture”). Both rulings were incorrect in this case—there is neither probable cause to believe that James Slatic illegally “extracted” marijuana in violation of Health and Safety Code § 11379.6 nor probable cause to believe that the money in the Slatik family's accounts are connected to that crime, even assuming that a crime occurred.

A. The court failed to apply a medical marijuana law that made extraction legal in January 2016.

In holding there is probable cause to believe James committed the crime of “extraction,” the court below erred as a matter of law by ignoring the controlling statute, the Medical Cannabis Regulation and Safety Act (MCRSA), Bus. & Prof. Code § 19300 et seq. Instead, the court evaluated probable cause under a now-superseded statutory framework, which was designed to combat clandestine methamphetamine labs but no longer applies to medical marijuana manufacturers. See Ex. A at 2:14–26.

The MCRSA supersedes the law that Med-West allegedly violated, which forbids manufacturing a controlled substance through chemical extraction “[e]xcept as otherwise provided by law.” Health & Safety Code § 11379.6(a). The MCRSA is just such a law. It authorizes medical marijuana manufacturers such as Med-West to produce concentrated cannabis using extraction. The MCRSA defines a “manufacturer” as:

[A] person that conducts the production, preparation, propagation, or compounding of manufactured medical cannabis, as described in subdivision (ae), or medical cannabis products either directly or indirectly or by extraction methods, or independently by means of chemical synthesis or by a combination of extraction and chemical synthesis at a fixed location that packages or repackages medical cannabis or medical cannabis products or labels or relabels its container.

Bus. & Prof. Code § 19300.5(ad) [former § 19300.5(y)] (emphasis added).

The MCRSA became effective on January 1, 2016—27 days before the raid on Med-West. 2015 Cal. Stats. ch. 689 (A.B. 266), § 12.³ It also applies retroactively to Med-West’s conduct before 2016. See People v. Wright (2006) 40 Cal.4th 81, 94–95 (holding that the Medical Marijuana Program applies retroactively to cases pending at the time of its enactment).

The MCRSA further authorizes medical marijuana manufacturers to operate without licenses until at least January 1, 2018:

[A] facility or entity that is operating in compliance with local zoning ordinances and other state and local requirements on or before January 1, 2018, may continue its operations until its application for licensure is approved or denied pursuant to this chapter.

Bus. & Prof. Code § 19321(c), 2015 Cal. Stats. ch. 689 (A.B. 266).

As the statute suggests, state licenses will not be issued until 2018. See California Bureau of Medical Cannabis Regulation, Frequently Asked Questions, bmcr.ca.gov/about_us/faq.shtml (last visited Dec. 15, 2016) (“Q. If I want to apply for a medical cannabis license issued by the Bureau, what should I do now? A. Be patient. The Bureau is still in the early stages of development and won’t be accepting applications for licenses until 2018.”).

Thus, under the MCRSA, existing medical marijuana businesses may continue operating consistent with local laws. Bus. & Prof. Code § 19321.⁴

The People have never alleged that Med-West was operating in violation of any local laws. On the contrary, James testified that Med-West worked with the San Diego City Council and local agencies to address the fact that no local laws currently exist. Tr. Vol. 1 at 181:22–182:19. Med-West applied for “every permit, every license” available under local law and cooperated with the City Attorney, Business Licensing, Building and Planning, and Development Services. Id. at 182:15–19. Prior to the raid, no one from these agencies indicated that anything was wrong with Med-West’s operation. See id. At the same time, Med-West was supplying city-licensed medical marijuana collectives and using city-licensed testing facilities for its products because local licenses did exist for these businesses. Id. at 180:10–24.

Because “extraction” was not a crime at the time of the raid, as a matter of law there can be no probable cause to believe that Med-West violated the prohibition on “extraction” in § 11379.6.

However, because it applied a now-superseded statute—§ 11379.6—

the court below erroneously found probable cause to believe that Med-West violated § 11379.6 because it used ethanol in its refinement process. See Ex. A at 2:17–20. But in the MCRSA, the Legislature specifically foresaw the apparent conflict between the two statutes and authorized the use of “volatile solvents,” such as ethanol, for the extraction of concentrated cannabis oil. See Bus. & Prof. Code § 19341 (authorizing manufacturers to use both volatile and non-volatile solvents to extract cannabis oil).

Med-West maintains that it never engaged in extraction of any kind, but it could legally have done so, and it could have done so using ethanol or another solvent. Accordingly, the court below applied the wrong law, analyzed irrelevant facts, and reached a legally untenable conclusion.

B. The People bear the burden of tracing seized money to a drug crime, but the court required third-party testimony negating traceability.

Probable cause does not exist to believe that all of the money in the Slatik family’s accounts is directly traceable to a crime, even if the Court assumes there is probable cause to believe that James’s business was operating illegally (which, as shown above, is impossible because a new statute made extraction legal). The contrary decision below relied on a fundamental misunderstanding about the power to seize property under Health and Safety Code § 11470. First, the court ignored the fact that Detective Carlson’s affidavits made no particularized allegations tracing the seized money to the alleged crime, although particularized allegations are essential to establishing probable cause. Second, the court rejected all evidence from the Slatics tracing their money to other legitimate sources based on the mistaken idea that third-party testimony is required to negate any connection between money and drugs, when in actuality, the People—not the Petitioners—bore the burden of tracing the money.

i. The People made no effort to trace the Slatic family’s money to the alleged crime of extraction and the court ignored on-point law holding that such tracing is mandatory.

In alleging probable cause, the People made no effort to trace the dollars and cents seized from the Slatics to James’s alleged crime of extraction. See pp. 19–21 above. Nevertheless, the court below held that all of the Slatics’ money can be seized because it believed there is probable cause connecting the money to “illegal activities.” See Ex. A at 3:5. By so holding, the court ignored on-point law that requires the People to trace specific money to a specific crime.

The money in this case was seized on the theory that it represents forfeitable proceeds under Health and Safety Code § 11470. Ex. I at 13:8–10 & Ex. J at 13:5–7. There are two elements for forfeiture of money under § 11470(f): (1) a crime for which forfeited is permitted (here, the superseded § 11379.6); and (2) the money is “traceable” to the crime.

In this case, the court ignored on-point case law requiring the People to make a prima facie showing for both elements—a violation of law and traceability of the money to that violation. See People v. $9,632.50 U.S. Currency (1998) 64 Cal.App.4th 163, 172–74; People v. $47,050 (1993) 17 Cal.App.4th 1319, 1322–23. This case law makes clear that when the government seeks to seize cash, or cash deposits in a bank account, it “must establish some nexus between the seized funds and a narcotics transaction.” $47,050, 17 Cal.App.4th at 1323 (reversing finding of probable cause to seize cash found alongside cocaine and marijuana). “Evidence sufficient to support an inference that seized funds are related to some illegal activity does not establish even a prima facie case of probable cause absent the demonstration of some link between the cash and a narcotics transaction.” Id. (emphasis in original).

For example, in People v. $48,715 U.S. Currency, the Court of Appeals affirmed a denial of a motion for return of property after reviewing the evidence of the crime and the evidence linking the cash to the crime. (1997) 58 Cal.App.4th 1507, 1517–19. Together, the evidence was “sufficient to establish probable cause to believe the currency was subject to forfeiture under section 11470.” Id. at 1519.

Thus, California law does not authorize the seizure of all assets belonging to a family based on a drug crime allegedly committed by one family member. Nor does it authorize the seizure of substitute assets up to the value a person may have earned from drug crimes. Instead, state law authorizes the forfeiture of “proceeds traceable to . . . an exchange” involving an illegal controlled substance. Health & Safety Code § 11470(f); $9,632.50, 64 Cal.App.4th at 172–74. While federal law imposes less burdensome traceability requirements than California law, the government still must show some reason to believe that seized property is traceable to a crime. See, e.g., United States v. $405,089.23 U.S. Currency (9th Cir. 1997) 122 F.3d 1285, 1290 (holding that a police affidavit failed to show probable cause to support the seizure of money deposited in a bank account by convicted drug traffickers using cashier’s checks purchased with cash); United States v. U.S. Currency, $30,060.00 (9th Cir. 1994) 39 F.3d 1039, 1044 (stating that “a mere suspicion of illegal activity is not enough to establish probable cause that the money was connected to drugs”).

Based on these traceability standards, California courts have specifically rejected the idea that “forfeiture spreads like a disease” which infects untainted funds when commingled with tainted funds in a bank account. $9,632.50, 64 Cal.App.4th at 169. “[N]othing in the California forfeiture scheme or the cases interpreting it suggests the Legislature intended untainted assets (whether belonging to a third person or person involved in drug activity) to be subject to forfeiture simply because they were in proximity with forfeitable assets.” Id. at 172 (emphasis in original); accord United States v. Real Property Located 20832 Big Rock Dr. (9th Cir. 1995) 51 F.3d 1402, 1411 (stating that “[a]ny interest in property purchased with illegitimate assets is forfeitable, but any interest purchased with legitimate assets, even the legitimate assets of a drug dealer or someone who knows they are doing business with a drug dealer, is not forfeitable because it is not ‘proceeds traceable to’ a drug transaction”).

The facts of $9,632.50 illustrate these principles. There, the People seized and attempted forfeiture of the entire balance of a man’s bank account after he rented his barn out as a methamphetamine laboratory for $8,000. 64 Cal.App.4th at 167. All but $700 in the account at the time of the seizure came from the man’s legitimate paychecks and tax refund. Id. at 168, 174. The Court of Appeals therefore rejected the forfeiture of $8,932.50 on the grounds that it “would effectively repeal the statutory requirement of tracing” and is “tantamount to saying that persons accused of dealing drugs should be deprived of the right to own any property.” Id. at 173–74 (emphasis in original).

Because tracing money to a crime is essential, probable cause to seize money has been rejected even when the money is found in close physical proximity to drugs. For example, in $47,050, police executed a warrant to search a home for cocaine. 17 Cal.App.4th at 1321. They found cocaine and marijuana, an electronic scale, two guns, and $47,050 in cash. Id. The court acknowledged that the security measures on the property (a fence, guard dogs, and guns) and the large amount of cash could reasonably be connected to illegal drug dealing, but still held that probable cause was lacking to believe that the $47,050 could be directly traced to a crime. Id. The court reasoned that the owner had “offered a well-corroborated explanation as to the source of the cash.” Id. at 1324 (emphasis in original). And the mere inference that some illegal activity was afoot is always insufficient to create probable cause to believe that seized money can ultimately be forfeited. Id. After all, even a convicted drug trafficker has a constitutional right to own property that is unconnected to his crime. See 20832 Big Rock Dr., 51 F.3d at 1411.

The People’s allegations in this case fail to meet these traceability standards. The People’s sole witness, Detective Carlson, made just three concrete allegations about James’s account. He detailed five instances in which James transferred money to his wife’s account. Ex. J at 10:12–15. He pointed to five checks that James received from his business, Highland Medical Packaging. Id. at 10:17–25. And he alleged that 21 cash deposits, which James made over the course of two and a half years, must have come from Med-West because police found a large amount of cash at Med-West. Id. at 11:1–17. On this basis alone, Carlson concluded that every dollar in James’s account is “tied to his concentrated cannabis extraction business.” Id. at 12:3–4. But he made no effort to trace the specific money in the account to illegal extraction, as required by Health and Safety Code § 11470(f).

Carlson made even less effort to trace the money in the accounts belonging to James's family members. Instead, he merely noted that Annette sometimes received money from James, see Ex. I at 10:3–7, and concluded on that basis that James had “transferred significant funds from his concentrated cannabis extraction business . . . to his wife,” id. at 12:14–21. For Lily and Penny's accounts, he simply noted that Annette sometimes transferred money to her daughters. Id. at 12:19–21. This evidence does not establish that the money in the Slatics' accounts is “proceeds traceable to” illegal extraction.

Indeed, the Court of Appeals in $9,632.50 squarely rejected the “comingling” theory on which Detective Carlson's allegations rely. Compare $9,632.50, 64 Cal.App.4th at 168–74 (holding that probable cause was lacking to seize more than $8,000 comingled in a bank account alleged to contain just $700 in drug proceeds) with Ex. J at 12:15–18 (alleging that $149,375 “generated by legitimate non-drug investments” can be seized because it was “comingled” with money allegedly tied to Med-West).

Despite these standards, the court in this case held that the transfer of funds between family members is, by itself, “indicative of illegal activities.” Ex. A at 3:5. But, of course, innocent people routinely transfer money into the accounts of family members for innocent reasons. See Tr. Vol. 1 at 76:18–26 (Detective Carlson admits this).

The court's obligation in this case was to analyze probable cause as to particular deposits and their purported connection to particular crimes. Instead, the court simply rubber-stamped Detective Carlson's allegations that all money belonging to the Slatics can be seized because James operated a medical marijuana business and transferred personal money to his family. This Court should reverse because, as shown above, on-point case law holds that a family does not forfeit its right to own property the moment one family member is suspected of a crime.

- ii. The court ignored un rebutted evidence that the Slatic family had non-medical-marijuana sources for their money and faulted them for not presenting third-party testimony.

The court below not only relieved the People of their burden to trace every dollar to the alleged crime of extraction, it also declined to credit evidence showing that the Slatics' money came from legitimate sources. The court rejected this evidence and faulted the Slatics for failing to call "neutral witnesses" who could affirmatively negate the People's theory of seizure. This requirement of "neutral witnesses" is contrary to precedent.

In its opinion, the court acknowledged that the Slatics had "put on evidence of innocent explanations" for the source of their money, Ex. A at 3:8–9, but rejected those explanations because they were provided by the family and a former business associate of James, which the court deemed "self-serving testimony," id. at 3:18–19. The court suggested that only testimony from “neutral witnesses” could rebut allegations of probable cause. See Ex. A at 3:15–19. In doing so, the court disregarded un rebutted evidence, including documentary evidence, which demonstrated that the $100,693 seized from the Slatics had come from legitimate sources other than James’s medical marijuana business.

This un rebutted evidence showed:

- Shortly before the seizure, James deposited a $149,375 check from his ownership in High Quality Organics—a culinary spice company with no connection to marijuana. See pp. 21–22 above.
- Annette deposited more than $45,000 a year from her job with the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs. See pp. 22–23 above.
- Annette received between $1,400 and $2,000 a month in child support payments from her ex-husband. See p. 23 above.
- During the period covered by Detective Carlson’s investigation, James had transferred around $200,000 to Annette for home renovations. See p. 24 above.
- Annette regularly deposited money from her VA paycheck into Lily and Penny’s accounts for college expenses. See pp. 24–25 above.

In addition to being un rebutted, much of this evidence was corroborated by Detective Carlson’s testimony. See pp. 21–25 above.

No matter what this evidence showed, however, the court’s analysis erroneously placed the burden on the Slatics to negate any connection between their money and the alleged crime of extraction when, as shown above, that burden was squarely on the People. See, e.g., $47,050, 17 Cal.App.4th at 1322 (noting “the People must make a minimum prima facie showing of probable cause to believe the property is subject to forfeiture”).

For example, in $9,632.50, the property owner admitted to police that he rented his barn for use as a methamphetamine laboratory in exchange for $8,000 in cash. 64 Cal.App.4th at 167. Later, the property owner and his family testified that he never received the $8,000. Id. In these circumstances, the Court of Appeals held that the trial court could reject the family’s testimony as incredible. Id. at 175. The Court of Appeals nevertheless reversed the forfeiture of the money and ordered return of all but $700. Id. In doing so, the Court specifically rejected the People’s theory that “proceeds traceable to an exchange for a controlled substance include any assets the claimant would not possess had he not been able to use drug money for routine financial needs.” Id. at 172–73. Instead, the Court engaged in an exhaustive tracing of the owner’s legitimate sources of money, and held as a matter of law that the People had failed to establish traceability as to all but $700. Id. at 174. The burden in $9,632.50 was placed where it belongs—on the People—despite the absence of “neutral witnesses.” See id. at 172. But in this case, an invented burden of calling “neutral witnesses” was erroneously placed on the Slatics.

Indeed, if the ruling in this case represented the law, the People could take everything a family owns based on a showing that any property owned by any family member is connected to any crime. The family would then be required to call “neutral witnesses” to prove the absence of a connection between their property and a crime. As shown above, this is not the law in California. See §9,632.50, 64 Cal.App.4th at 172 (holding that “nothing in the California forfeiture scheme or the cases interpreting it suggests the Legislature intended untainted assets (whether belonging to a third person or person involved in drug activity) to be subject to forfeiture simply because they were in proximity with forfeitable assets”). This is particularly true where, as here, none of the family members have been charged with (let alone convicted of) a crime and where, as here, none of the family members could possibly be convicted because the alleged criminal activity is not actually criminal.

II. This Court should order the immediate return of all of the seized money because the Slatc family’s constitutional rights are being violated every day their money remains in custody.

When probable cause is lacking, state law provides for one remedy: return of the property. See Pen. Code § 1540 (requiring that where probable cause is lacking, “the magistrate must cause [the property] to be restored to the person from whom it was taken”). This requirement makes sense. Probable cause is a constitutional standard, which must be satisfied before the government can seize a person's property. See Cal. Const. art. I, § 13; U.S. Const. amend. IV.

Here, Petitioners have demonstrated that probable cause is lacking both because there is no possibility that they are guilty of the only crime alleged and because, even if they were guilty, there is no connection between their money and that crime. Because probable cause is lacking, Petitioners' constitutional rights are being violated every day their money remains in the People's custody. This Court should, therefore, order the immediate return of the money.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, this Court should grant the petition and issue a writ of mandate directing the Respondent Court to grant Petitioners' motion for return of property as to all $100,693.85. Alternatively, this Court should grant the petition and order the return of that portion of the family's money that the Court deems unconnected to James's business.
